Contact the hotels directly to book yourself or make your reservation through a local travel agency. In addition, you are given a short introduction to the different quarters of town to get a better orientation in the choice of the place that best suits you. We wish you a comfortable stay!

Hotels in Mitte (Zone 1)

The limits of Berlin's smallest district correspond to the city's dimension of 1840. Consequently, this is where most historic monuments and the famous museum are to be found. In the past decade, Mitte has experienced a construction and tourist boom, with hotels and shops sprouting up, as around Friedrichstraße. Besides, many old edifices have been refurbished, although the major project – the master plan for the Museums Island – will not be concluded until 2015.

Hotels in Prenzlauer Berg (Zone 2)

This quarter, though mostly spared by bombs in the war, fell into neglect afterwards and only revived in the nineties, thus becoming a symbol for a young, cosmopolitan Berlin: Students and creative folks moved in, opened bars & shops, renovated houses and – started families. Around Kollwitz square and the impressive structure of the water tower you will find countless cafés brimming with life and interesting people. This is absolutely the place to be for all who are 'young in mind'. And, by the way, it's only 15 minutes from the Museums Island by public transport.

Hotels in Charlottenburg and Tiergarten (Zone 3)

If you travel by train, you will probably arrive at Berlin's grand central station, opened in 2006, close to the new parliamentary district and the modern centre around Potsdamer Platz. But, although Zoo station was downgraded, there are still many nice hotels to be found in the vicinity and around Ku'damm. What once was the centre of former West Berlin continues to be a most popular shopping area, beneath the distinctive silhouette of the Memorial Church. Not far from Charlottenburg palace, where some Prussian kings used to spend the summer, are also the fairgrounds, the convention centre and the Olympic Stadium.

In the middle of Tiergarten, which also is the name of a park with a surface of over 500 acres, lies another of Berlin's landmarks: The Victory column, which you may want to climb, after a morning run or a placid walk in this green oasis in the heart of the city.

Hotels in Schöneberg and Willmersdorf (Zone 4)

Near to Potsdamer Platz, Kreuzberg and Ku'damm shopping area, Schöneberg is the perfect base for trips in all directions. There are nice antiques, fashion and design shops in the area, the atmosphere is relaxed, with slight touch of Bohème. Some streets are firmly in hands of the gay scene, but still you meet quite a mixed crowd here at night. Willmersdorf is much quieter and more bourgeois, with beautiful mansions from the last 100 years, not only in the residential areas lining/along Grunewald forest. But even here you find some corners where you can sense a whiff of the twenties – it's definitely Berlin. Schöneberg town hall, formerly seat of the West Berlin government, saw a historical moment on 26 June, 1963 when John F. Kennedy, on his visit to the Cold-War border town, spoke the unforgotten words: "Ich bin ein Berliner".

Hotels in Kreuzberg and Friedrichshain (Zone 5)

Kreuzberg, which in post-war Berlin was part of the American sector (Checkpoint Charlie), lay in the shade of the wall. While the average citizen fled these areas, the quarter turned into a refuge for people eager to experiment new social and artistic forms. Immigrants, mainly of Turkish origin, also settled here, as the housing was cheap - and derelict! Although the wild times of the squatters' movement have long passed, some of that spirit still lingers. You may best experience this multicultural flair in May 2007 (25 – 28) at the Carnival of Cultures. The nearby 'Landwehrkanal' is an enticing place for a walk or a boat trip. The Eastern 'sister district' Friedrichshain, on the other side of the river Spree, is quite different, but nonetheless interesting. Between Karl-Marx- Allee, a monumental avenue from Stalinist times, and the East Side Gallery on the remains of former wall you get a different idea of Berlin. Don't miss the quarter around Simon-Dach-Straße, popular not only with students and perfect for a night out.

Hotels outside the Berlin city centre (Zone 6)

Berlin covers a huge area of over 340 sq miles. The hotels presented hereunder are less than a 30 minutes drive away from the Berlin city centre. Some of them offer better terms or facilities for large groups; some are situated in a nice, quite surrounding or closer to airports and motorways. All are, of course, closer to the surrounding region of Brandenburg that is well worth more than one visit. Besides towns like Potsdam, famous for its artistic heritage, and natural reserves like the Spreewald region, there are many more beautiful places to be discovered in the 'Land' of storks and cranes.
